THE RENAISSANCE AND CUBIST CONCEPTIONS OF SPACE

A STUDY OF THE FORM AND CONTENT OF THE DESCRIP-TIONS OF LANDSCAPE IN ATALA, RENÉ, ILLUSIONS PERDUES,

POWELL, S. Robert, Ph.D.

Indiana University, 1974

Chateaubriand, Balzac, Stendhal, Flaubert, and Zola all develop and utilize in their novels spatial and aesthetic principles which were rudimentarily established during the Renaissance in the late fifteenth and sixteenth century. The structural forms of Atala, René, Illusions Perdues, La Chartreuse de Parme, Madame Bovary, and Le Ventre de Paris, and of the descriptions of landscape contained in those novels--whether external or internal spatial forms--clearly indicate that each of the novelists in question establishes depth in space within the closed geometric spatial system of the Renaissance by means of single viewpoint linear perspective. Those spatial frames are, in varying degrees, endowed with a temporal dimension. Given that spatial framework, each of these novelists studies (1) man, (2) nature, and (3) the transactions between man and the natural world. The most comprehensive representation of the ordinary world of human experience in the novel in the nineteenth century is found in the place novel (Madame Bovary and Le Ventre de Paris)--the consummate expression of the Renaissance conception of space and art in the genre of the novel in the four-hundred-year period that that spatial and aesthetic system was considered a valid basis for the creation of art.

In certain descriptions of landscape in La Chartreuse de Parme and in Madame Bovary, Stendhal and Flaubert, respectively, transcend, whether consciously or unconsciously, the spatial limitations of the closed spatial system of the Renaissance: the former by means of panoramic and telescopic vision, the latter by describing three separate actions simultaneously. La Chartreuse de Parme and Madame Bovary, seen as autonomous aesthetic phenomena, represent a dialectic between the space picture of the Renaissance and that of the modern world.

Unlike Chateaubriand, Balzac, Stendhal, Flaubert, and Zola, all of whom adapt the inherited spatial and artistic legacy of the Renaissance to their individual aesthetic needs, Huysmans rejects the Renaissance conception of space as a valid basis for the creation of art. Huysmans establishes the spatial form of A Rebours and of the landscape descriptions therein by means of multiple viewpoint or simultaneous perspective. Several spatial frames are juxtaposed in a moment of time and refer to each other reflexively. Movement in space is possible without any movement in time. The content of A Rebours and of the descriptions of landscape in that novel demonstrate that the study of the time world of history and the imitation of the appearances of beings and things such as they are perceived by the senses are no longer considered as the purpose of art. During the final decades of the nineteenth century art becomes an essentially cerebral undertaking whose purpose is to explore and determine man's psychic position in the modern world. The spatial and aesthetic principles established by Huysmans in A Rebours represent the basic tenets of the cubist conception of space and art.

THIS WEEK AT BEREAN

Today: 9:30 A.M. Church School, classes for all ages.
11:00 A.M. Worship Service. Greeters are John and Grace Moon

Wednesday:

7:30 P.M. Community Thanksgiving Service at the Episcopal Church. Rev. William Feldcamp, new pastor of St. Rose Church, will be the speaker.

Next Sunday:

9:30 A.M. Church School. All are invited.

11:00 A.M. Worship Service. All are invited. Greeters are Robert and Mae Perry. First Sunday of Advent. Advent attendance watch begins. Let's try to have 100 in worship every week.

6:30 P.M. Hanging of the Greens. Come and help us decorate for the Christmas season.

MISSION TREE

The response to the "Carol Tree" has been very encouraging thus far. Envelopes are still available. If you have not received yours, see Grace Moon. The tree will be decorated each Sunday starting December 6th, as the cuts-out are received, through December 20th. The proceeds this year will go to the Blesy Seigle Kidney Fund.

GUEST BOOK

Visitors are invited to sign our guest register at the rear of the sanctuary.

SINCERE SYMPATHY

We extend our sincere sympathy to Earl and Ethel Parry on the passing of Ethel's sister, Gloria Crocker Matano, on November 13th.

Many thanks to those who have agreed to visit on behalf of the Church. Cards are available downstairs.

New doors on the Lincoln Avenue side will be presented by Mr. and Mrs. Earl Parry in loving memory of Lucretia and Fred Crocker, Gloria Crocker Matano, and Roy Crocker. We greatly appreciate their gift.

WORK TOUR

Don Seigle II has signed up for a working mission tour to Florida, December 26--January 3. They are planning to work 10 hours a day on houses that were damaged in Hurricane Andrew. He must provide money for his own expenses, which will be about $250. This is a good mission project for individuals and groups in the Church. The trip is sponsored by the First Baptist Church of Wellsboro, PA.

A HAPPY ENDING

A 'Lost Generation' Scholar of American Poetry Ends His Long Odyssey for a Place in Academe

ARTHUR PHILLIPS FOR THE CHRONICLE

Edward Brunner: "Suddenly, all the work I'd been doing in the corners of my life is my life."

By SCOTT HELLER

Seventeen years and hundreds of failed job applications after finishing his Ph.D., Edward Brunner got a full-time teaching post this year.

He teaches modern American poetry at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale. Because he had already published two books, he was appointed as an associate professor and may apply for tenure early.

The odd jobs, the years working as a railroad dispatcher, a payroll clerk, and a county auditor, are behind him now. Reading poetry during his coffee breaks is a thing of the past. He is a scholar and teacher, full time. "Suddenly, all the work I'd been doing in the corners of my life is my life," he said.

Mr. Brunner, who is 46 years old, was a card-carrying member of academe's "lost generation," the humanities scholars who got degrees in the 1960's and early 1970's and never found steady academic work. Since finishing his doctorate at the University of Iowa in 1974, he had steadily tried to get an academic job, with no success (The Chronicle, May 23, 1990).

His fortunes changed in fall 1990, when he spotted a teaching opening in 20th-century literature in the Modern Language

Association's job listings. He interviewed at the annual meeting in Chicago that December.

Only once before was Mr. Brunner invited to interviews at the MLA conference. That year, he couldn't get the time off from his Iowa City auditor's job to go.

Chicago was close enough for Mr. Brunner to sneak away. Later, he visited the Carbondale campus, and discussed his research with faculty members and students. The university made an offer, and Mr. Brunner made the move.

He is something of an academic Rip Van Winkle, waking up in a new scholarly world. But he has been an active scholar all along. Since finishing graduate school, he has published several journal articles and books on the poets Hart Crane and W. S. Merwin.

MLA Book Award in 1986

He wrote much of the Crane book while working for the Rock Island Railroad. The book won a 1986 MLA award for best scholarly work by an independent researcher.

Mr. Brunner has had to catch up with recent literary theories and the new interest in multiculturalism. He teaches Indian captivity narratives in an American literature survey course, and said he noticed that more scholars are interested in Melville's Civil War poetry than he remembers from his days in graduate school. Gone, he said, are the poetry of Sidney Lanier and the journal writings of John Woolman.

The professor believes that Southern Illinois hired him when so many other universities didn't because the campus attracts students who have been away from higher education for a while. "Everyone is sort of used to people whose careers have been interrupted," he said.

'We Thought We Were Lucky'

The long stretches on his résumé without academic employment didn't hurt, said Richard F. Peterson, chairman of the English department. "We thought we were lucky that someone so articulate and who had done so much scholarship was available," Mr. Peterson said. Mr. Brunner is one of nine professors hired by the department this year to replace faculty members who retired, left, or died.

Mr. Brunner has begun work on a third book, about the academic poetry of the 1950's, work that now receives less attention than that of the Beat poets. Next year, Mr. Brunner will teach his first graduate course—on the poets John Berryman, Robert Lowell, and Elizabeth Bishop.

"I wouldn't have thought it would have worked out quite so nicely," he said.

"It's a happy ending in Ed's case," Mr. Peterson added. "I just worry about all the others." ■

Hope for academe's 'lost generation'

TO THE EDITOR:

Scott Heller's story in the April 15 Chronicle ("A 'Lost Generation' Scholar of American Poetry Ends His Long Odyssey for a Place in Academe") about Edward Brunner's success in securing a full-time teaching post at Southern Illinois University is inspiring. Until I read Scott Heller's article, I was under the impression, believe it or not, that I was one of a small number of Ph.D.'s who finished their degrees in the humanities in the 1960's or early 1970's who have never found full-time academic posts. Apparently there are hundreds, possibly thousands, of members of academe's "lost generation."

Thanks to Scott Heller's story about Dr. Brunner's success, I am encouraged and emotionally strengthened and will continue my search for a full-time position in the academic community.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Not in Our Field

TED BENSON FOR THE CHRONICLE

TO THE EDITOR:

I was interested to learn that old telephone books are being used as bedding for cattle at the University of Illinois ("Directory assistance for Illinois cows," December 11).

In the last paragraph of the article we learn that "the paper is scattered over the barn floor and changed once a week, after the cows have ground it into pulp by standing and sitting on it."

Ferdinand, the bull in the children's story "The Story of Ferdinand," does, as I recall, sit among the flowers, but real-life cows (and bulls) either stand up or lie down. They never sit down. . . .

S. ROBERT POWELL
Adjunct Instructor of Humanities
Pennsylvania State University
Worthington-Scranton Campus
Dunmore, Pa.

TO THE EDITOR:

Regarding your squib about bedding for cattle at the University of Illinois: Cows don't sit. To a city slicker it may sometimes look that way because cattle occasionally pause briefly on their haunches when they go from a lying to a standing position.

LOWELL BOUMA
Professor of Foreign Languages
Georgia Southern University
Statesboro, Ga.

TO THE EDITOR:

Having grown up on the farm, I enjoyed a moment of mirth reading your December 11 article. Cattle "sitting" about is a truly comic image evocative of "The Far Side" cartoon.

ARTS & SCIENCES

For Alumni of Columbian College and the Graduate School of Arts & Sciences

Prof. Frey had a profound effect on me. He was the first one to champion my work in French literature. He directed my Master's thesis, which he later on quoted directly in one of his books.

His impact on my life has been immense.

sored by Columbian College Alumni Association and for whom Frey served as dissertation adviser, echoes Turman's sentiments. Now working for the National Endowment for the Humanities promoting humanities projects at the grassroots level, Rogers says Frey helped her develop the critical eye for reading that she continues to use at work and for pleasure. "He forced us to think in a new way," said Rogers. "For Jack is a gifted and unique teacher... the finest I have had the fortune to encounter."

"I don't know anybody who's better at the job we're all supposed to be good at," adds Roy Guenther, chairman of GW's Music Department. Guenther, who gave several guest lectures in Frey's 19th century course last fall, including an evening sitting around a piano playing Methodist hymns, admits he doesn't have the hours in the day that Frey regularly devotes to his students. "He has to feel good when he goes home at night."

The professor's commitment to GW carries over into campus activities as well, including his recent chairmanship of a special Faculty Senate Committee that examined the University's track record in affirmative-action hiring. Frey's group "took their charge seriously," says William Griffith, chair of the Senate's Executive Committee. "They prepared a good proposal."

"A lot of people don't believe in cultural diversity," says Frey, who as department chair assembled a more culturally diverse Romance language faculty and led efforts to update the department's curriculum offerings. "I think it's worthwhile." On the Senate committee, "we tried to say, you know, you don't have to be to the right or the left. We are all better human beings when we acknowledge the fact that we are men and we are women and we come from diverse cultures, races and religions."

Happy and proud to be honored with the Trachtenberg Prize, Frey knows a good teacher when he sees one. "I think that [good teachers] probably still act like students themselves," he says. "They are busy learning."

Debra Duff is editor of "By George!" the newspaper of the GW community published by the University Relations Office. Her article about Jack Frey originally appeared in the summer 1991 edition of "By George!"

John Andrew "Jack" Frey, professor of Romance Languages, was named the first recipient of GW's Oscar and Shoshana Trachtenberg Prize for Teaching in May. The prize, which includes a $1,000 cash award, was endowed by GW President Stephen Joel Trachtenberg to honor the memory of his late parents. It was formally presented at the Columbian College May Commencement.

Jack Frey attended the University of Cincinnati as an undergraduate. The day student lived at home, and his father dropped him off very early each morning on his way to work. Frey remembers he had lots of time to fill before classes began, and he regularly would spend the hours in the library. "I read, read, read," he admits wistfully, "and I would read the craziest things—Life magazine from the beginning on, for example. But they were all good experiences."

Some 40 years later, Jack Frey is still reading and still serving up to students a full platter of lessons, including the importance of good library habits. The University's awarding of the Trachtenberg Prize to him is a tribute to his illustrious and ongoing career as teacher, mentor, scholar and inspiration.

Frey arrived at GW in 1960, fresh from earning a doctorate at Catholic University and two short stints teaching in high school and at St. Joseph's College in Philadelphia. "I don't think I started off with much gray matter," says the youthful 61-year-old of his academic and teaching career. "I'm rather convinced that I didn't." His "persistently working away," he claims, has been the key to success.

How does Frey, who teaches a full range of French language and literature courses, help his students develop their own potential? The first method, he says, is by monitoring. "I try to stress that students should be very conscious of what they are doing," he explains, "and not to allow any foggy things in their minds." Second, he advocates outlining. "I tell students if you can't outline you don't know what you're talking about." Frey also believes that stress hinders learning. "I think the removal of anxiety is a very important factor," he says. "For that reason, I return papers immediately. I don't keep anything hanging at all."

It's clear students in Frey's Fall '90 Humanities course on "The 19th Century" felt little stress and demonstrated lots of creativity. Frey has taught the interdisciplinary course for the past two years and plans to continue the assignment this fall. Of last year's group, proclaims Frey: "I can say without hesitation that [they] were the best group of students I've had in my entire life."

The class read more than 3,000 pages of literature—from Dickens to Dostoevsky. Term papers, a minimum of 20 pages, addressed topics of prime interest in students' lives, providing they related to the 19th century. One pre-med student chronicled the development of chemistry in the 19th century; another, the phenomenon of the Methodist Church. "Well, they got very excited about all this stuff," relates Frey, "so we did field trips" — to cemeteries even, where they read poetry and examined tombstones.

The enthusiasm, Frey reports, did not die at the end of the term. In January, students from the fall course founded the 19th Century Society, a club that since has received full approval by the Student Association. "It's a real society," explains Frey, the group's faculty adviser, "to such an extent that we've had inquiries from two other campuses about the possibility of chartering in other places, and we would be the founding club."

This spring, official club activities included a "Saturday Afternoon on the Louvre" at the Renwick Gallery and a visit to DC's St. Elizabeths Hospital, as a follow-up to one student's paper on the evolution of the treatment of the insane. More activities, including a lecture on writer George Sand, are in the works for the fall.

"They take up a lot of my time," admits Frey, "but I don't mind. I really enjoy being with them. The 19th Century Society was born of the enthusiasm of these students."

Christopher Turman, the society's president and a student who nominated Frey for the Trachtenberg Prize, is enthusiastic all right, particularly about his experience in Frey's class as a first-semester freshman.

"It made my year to have a class where I got to know my professor outside of the classroom," says Turman, who hailed from a small private school in Philadelphia and regularly stopped by to talk with Frey about the Gulf War or his own life's developments. "He was our teacher and he always will be our teacher. He's someone we can learn so much from, even when we're not in the classroom."

D&H TREK

Organized by the D&H Transportation Heritage Council, a partnership of public, private, and not-for-profit local, state, and federal organizations and individuals, including the Carbondale Historical Society and Museum.

CARBONDALE TO THE HUDSON RIVER October 9-12, 1998

The D&H Trek is being held to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the last trip by a canal boat, #1107, over the entire length of the D&H Canal, from Honesdale to Rondout. To celebrate that anniversary, sturdy cyclists will leave Carbondale at 10 A.M. on October 9, 1998, and pedal the entire distance of the D&H Gravity Railroad and Canal (over 125 miles) and deliver anthracite coal to Kingston, NY, on Monday, October 12, 1998.

CELEBRATING CARBONDALE'S HISTORY

The members, officers, and directors of the Carbondale Historical Society and Museum are pleased to have been able to do their part to commemorate this important event in the history of the D&H and the history of Carbondale. To become a member of the Society, contact the Secretary (Eleanor Spellman) or the Treasurer (Joseph Pascoe) at the Society's headquarters in City Hall. The number there is 282-0385.

The members of the Board of Directors of the Carbondale Historical Society are: Joan Connor, Robert Davies, Michael Delfino, Betty Dowd, Dominick Famularo, Tom Fontana, Jack Gillen, Marjanie Hellman, Paul Kaczmarcik, John Lawler, Marie McHugh, Anne Muldoon, Nancy Osborne, Erin Rupp, Michael Scott, Paul Starzer, Jeffrey Wallis, Rosemary Wallis, and Gloria Wilson.

THE CANAWLER

A professionally made film about the D&H Canal, titled The Canawler, was shown last night at 7:30 P.M. in Carbondale City Council chambers. This presentation was sponsored by the Carbondale Historical Society and Museum. Special thanks to Rich Wagner for allowing the Society to show his VHS transfer from the original 16 mm. copy owned by the Society.

A broad range of artifacts relating to the D&H's Gravity Railroad and Canal are owned by the Carbondale Historical Society. Many of those artifacts are now on display at the Historical Society on the third floor of Carbondale City Hall.

SPECIAL THANKS

During the 70 years that the D&H Canal was operational, tens of millions of tons of anthracite coal were shipped over the D&H Canal from Honesdale to the Hudson River. A large percentage of that coal was shipped from Carbondale to Honesdale over the D&H Canal Company's Gravity Railroad—and then to market, via the D&H Canal.

Special thanks to Jane Varcoe and Barbara Holmes of the Waymart Historical Society for emphasizing, at the initial D&H Trek meetings, the importance of the D&H Gravity Railroad in these four-day centennial ceremonies to mark the trip by the last boat through the D&H Canal.

THANK YOU

Sincere thanks to the following individuals and organizations for their assistance in making possible these kick-off ceremonies, sponsored by the Carbondale Historical Society and Museum, Inc.

1. Senator Robert Mellow (proclamation and endorsement)
2. Representative Edward Staback (proclamation and endorsement)
3. Victor Gazella and Boy Scout Troop 312 and Cub Scout Pack 17 (scouting participation in ceremony)
4. Police Chief Dominick Andidora and the Mounted Police of the Carbondale Police Department (traffic control and Trek escort)

THE TRIBUNE, SCRANTON, PA

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 17, 1999

Under the direction of James McMyne, the Carbondale Area Junior-Senior High School Band performs "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" Tuesday during "Charter Day Ceremonies," a celebration of the 148th anniversary of the incorporation of the City of Carbondale.

C'dale celebrates Charter Day

By Christopher J. Kelly
TRIBUNE REGIONAL STAFF

The city of Carbondale was conceived in a downtown concert hall on Oct. 5, 1850. Six months later, on March 15, 1851, it was officially born.

The rest is history.

Memories and music mined from the fertile past of the oldest city in the anthracite region and fourth oldest in the state made for a telling touchstone to the future Tuesday as students at Carbondale Area High School celebrated the 148th anniversary of the city's incorporation.

Directed by Carbondale Historical Society and Museum President Dr. S. Robert Powell, a group of students hosted the 7th Charter Day Ceremonies, an hour-long program of historical narrative and musical performances topped off with official proclamations from state and city government officials.

■ Carbondale ■

"A lot of local history used to be taught in the schools," Dr. Powell said, explaining the inspiration for the ceremonies. "Now it's not, which is too bad, especially in an area like this with such important history. This connects them to the past. It tries to open that door."

When opened, that door reveals Carbondale as a village that sprang up just 26 years after the signing of the Declaration of Independence to become a city 15 years before Scranton and 20 years before Wilkes-Barre.

Leading their fellow students across the threshold were seventh-grader Carmen Winters, eighth-grader Kathy Brager, freshman Melinda Atkins, sophomore James Prieto, juniors Carlo Savo and Leo Makosky, and seniors Carrie and Michelle Tolerico.

oral history of the city, the students provided a detailed account of how faith, the railroad industry and King Coal turned the village into a boom-town.

Adding musical punctuation to the narrative were the junior-senior high school band and chorus. Senior Jeremy Pilny drew thunderous applause for an original percussion piece penned for the day's festivities.

In a proclamation designating March 15 "Carbondale Charter Day," Mayor Michael Tolerico lauded the city's contributions to American industry and said its place in Pennsylvania history is as deserved as it is secure.

Laurie Carlo, legislative assistant to state Rep. Ed Staback, delivered a citation from the state House of Representatives which hailed Carbondale's "diligent and productive citizens who have helped it to become an inspiring presence in this Commonwealth."

In closing, Dr. Powell called on all Carbondale residents to pull together to make the city's next 148 years as memorable as its first.

"Every one of you is as valuable as any asset any community can have. We are the city. You and I are the city," he said. "We are Carbondale."

The Carbondale Historical Society has presented its Distinguished Award for Historic Preservation to the owners of a home at 28 Lincoln Ave. In 1990, Joe and Toulla Vitale purchased the "Alfred Pascoe House," named after its original builder and owner in the 19th century. Restoration work began in 1993 and completed in 1996. Refabrication of interior woodwork was accomplished by Dietmar

Meyerrose, John Burberniak and Gary Moss. Al Granville replaced the roofing, and Bill Sandlin of Hawley did the painting. Attending the presentation of the award on December 2, 1998 were, left to right, Gary and Jennifer Moss, Joseph and Toulla Vitale, and Historical Society officers Joseph Pascoe and S. Robert Powell. Historical Soc. preserving city's heritage

In November of 1981, a committee headed by S. Robert Powell was formed to initiate the restoration of the city building in downtown Carbondale. The group's first order of business was repairing the age-old tower clock at City Hall, but before that was accomplished, a merger took place among the committee members and several people who had been involved with a historical society begun seven years earlier in the city. The result of that merger was the Carbondale Historical Society and Museum, Inc., which now stands as the only organization dedicated to the preservation of a city's history in all of Lackawanna County. They have also been recognized by the state of Pennsylvania as a repository for artifacts and research material dealing with our local area.

First established in October of 1974 when Dr. Paul Gillette recommended that local history somehow be preserved, the original group (known simply as the Carbondale Historical Society) met over a two-year period at the Presbyterian Church and at private homes before interest among its members waned and the society became functionally non-existent until it was reshaped in '81. The Carbondale Historical Society is probably best remembered for a huge bicentennial pageant they presented at Russell Park in 1976, which Powell (though not affiliated with the group at that time) recalls fondly as being "a Cecil B. DeMille-type production."

As the restoration of City Hall commenced in the early '80s, the Carbondale Historical Society and Museum, Inc. received permission to use the third floor of the building as its new location and immediately began renovating it. Three of the rooms on that floor have since been completed, and two more are still being worked on. There, exhibits, artifacts, paintings, and photographs record in remarkable detail the rich history of the Pioneer City, with a special emphasis on mining and railroads. In addition, the group's extensive archival material includes birth, death, and naturalization records of citizens past and present, local family genealogies, and historical reference aids.

Perhaps most impressive of all, the society joined with the Carbondale Public Library in microfilming Carbondale city newspaper editions dating from the 1820s to present day, an astounding collection that is kept for public viewing at the library.

Their current membership list boasts 150 people, several of whom belonged to the original group started in '74. Among those original members was Joseph Pascoe, who is presently coordinating plans for the society's 1992 Christmas dinner and annual meeting. Besides Powell, who was chosen as the Carbondale Historical Society and Museum, Inc.'s first president and still holds that office, the current officers are John Buberniak and Bob Price (co-vice presidents), Rita Scott (secretary), and Howard Yepson (treasurer).

Worth noting is the fact that all of the people involved in the society are volunteers and give their time freely just to make sure that Carbondale's history is preserved for future generations to study and enjoy.

But preserving local heritage is only a part of what the historical society does. They are still actively involved in the ongoing City Hall restoration project, raising $18,000 several years ago and then acquiring matching state funds to have a portion of the roof replaced. They have also sponsored a free Christmas music concert at the Berean Baptist Church for nine years now, and plant flower boxes in Memorial Park and in the downtown business area each spring. This year's concert will be conducted on December 13.

The public is invited to call 282-0385 and leave a message on the answering machine if they wish to tour the historical society premises or examine any of the records. Tours of the third floor museum are also offered as class trips for schools or to various civic groups who desire to learn more about the ties that bind present and past generations of Carbondaleans. In fact, during the Steamtown excursion this past September, Powell reports that over 500 people toured the site.

The Carbondale Historical Society and Museum, Inc. is indeed preserving our history, but while they do, they're also helping to make it.

★★★ 1987 CALENDAR ★★★

The Carbondale Historical Society is now preparing for publication a 1987 BIRTHDAY AND HISTORICAL wall calendar.

The illustrations at the top of each page of the calendar will be photographs and/or engravings of important individuals, historical sites and objects from the rich history of the area.

Printed in the various day blocks on these calendar pages will be: (1) important historical facts from the area's history that took place during each month of the year, (2) the birthdays and anniversaries of important historical figures from the area, and (3) the birthdays and anniversaries of PRESENT-DAY INDIVIDUALS FROM THE AREA—which is why this public announcement is being made.

This is an invitation to you to list your birthday or anniversary—and the birthdays and anniversaries of your family and friends—on this 1987 BIRTHDAY AND HISTORICAL CALENDAR, WHICH WILL BE PUBLISHED THIS SUMMER AND WILL BE AVAILABLE FOR DISTRIBUTION AND SALE BY THE Historical Society, as well as many area stores, beginning in August 1986.

HOW TO LIST YOUR BIRTHDAY/ANNIVERSARY ON THIS CALENDAR. For each birthday/anniversary that you would like to have printed on this 1987 calendar, the cost is only $1.00. Fill out the request form that is given below, and mail it, together with $1.00 for each birthday/anniversary that you would like listed, and mail in today your request to the Historical Society.

Don't pass up this opportunity to have your birthday—and the birthdays of the members of your family and friends—listed in this calendar history of the Carbondale Area.

Carbondale Historical Society publishes calendar with area historical facts

The Carbondale Historical Society's 1987 Birthday and Historical Calendar was published on Friday, August 1, 1986. Like the Historical calendar published by the Historical Society in 1983, the 1987 calendar presents to the reader a wide range of historical facts and data from the history of the following communities: Carbondale, Carbondale Township, Fell Township, Forest City, Greenfield Township, Jermyn, Mayfield, Richmondale and Simpson.

Reported in the various day blocks on this full-size wall calendar are: (1) important historical facts from the area's history and events that took place during each month of the year, (2) the birthdays and anniversaries of important historical figures from the area, and (3) the birthdays and anniversaries of hundreds of present-day Carbondale area people and out of town residents and friends of the area.

Also included in the day blocks of this calendar are proverbs, popular sayings and direct quotations of various individuals. These have been included--as they are on many calendars, almanacs, and day books--for the purpose of enriching the document by making available to the reader these intrinsically interesting proverbs, popular sayings and direct quotations, some of which are well known, others of which are perhaps less well known.

At the top of each month page in this calendar is an historic photograph from the area's rich history. Reproduced on eight of the pages in this calendar are stereoscopic views of the area from the collection of Mrs. Marjorie Snedeker Holstein, Ardmore, PA. Seven of these stereo views were taken by L. Hensel of Port Jervis and Hawley in the 1870's and have been out of print for over 100 years. The eighth stereo view is "Boy Picking Slate in a Great Coal Breaker, Anthracite Mines, Pa." This view by photographer Lewis Hine was published in 1910 by the Keystone View Company and was instrumental in the passage of the child labor laws in this country.

Published in this calendar is "A Brief History of the Stereograph" by Mrs. Holstein. In that history, she defines a stereograph as follows: "Stereographs, more commonly known as stereo views, are a pair of similar but not quite identical photographs which, when viewed through a simple device called a stereoscope, produce the illusion of single three-dimensional image."

These eight stereographs are reproduced actual size in the calendar, which means that if the reader has access to a stereoscope and views the stereo reproductions on this calendar through that stereoscope that they will "read" as stereograph cards, that is to say, an illusion of a single three-dimensional image of each of these views of Carbondale and the surrounding area will be produced.

The other photographs published in the calendar are: Fall Brook Road, about 1900; the Russell Homestead, R.D., Carbondale. In addition, portraits of Henry Francis (?) Loftus and Henry Joseph Loftus and Maria Frances Loftus are published in this 1987 calendar.

Copies of the Historical Society's 1987 Birthday and Historical Calendar are now available ($5 per calendar plus $1 postage and handling) from the Historical Society, Post Office Box 151, Carbondale. Copies will also be available from the Historical Society at their booth during Pioneer Days, and from vendors throughout the city following Pioneer Days.

From: S. Robert Powell

On Sunday afternoon, November 9, 1986, at 3:00 P.M., a reading of Truman Capote's A CHRISTMAS MEMORY will take place at the Elkdale residence of S. Robert Powell. You are invited to attend and to participate in this reading.

I have enclosed a copy of the complete text of A CHRISTMAS MEMORY. If there is a portion of the text that you would like to read (I trust that everyone will want to read), please let me know before November 9th. A tape recording of the reading will be made.

Following the reading, a bonfire will be lighted, regardless of the weather, and a wiener roast will take place. Perhaps you would like to bring something for this wiener roast?

Dress warmly.

Irving Joseph, who wrote the original score for the string quartet which introduces and closes this album, is a prominent name in music circles. Well known as an arranger and conductor both of classical and jazz music, he wrote and performed in the first series of jazz piano quartets; has worked as pianist with major bands; arranged and conducted many recording dates; and has been an accompanist for many outstanding singers.

EXCERPTS FROM CRITICAL COMMENT ON
"A CHRISTMAS MEMORY."

"In 'A Christmas Memory' Mr. Capote presents a childhood to cherish."

—Coleman Rosenberger, Herald Tribune Book Review

"One of the most moving stories in our language."

—Paul Darcy Boles, The Saturday Review

"'A Christmas Memory' . . . is just that—a memory of a Christmas season when the author was seven and living with an endearing, childlike old female relative. It is full of kitchen smells and tastes, of outdoor excursions to gather nuts and holly, of the world of things and childlike human warmth. One is tempted to quote, but it is contrived of so many small touches that one would be obliged to quote it all to convey its flavor. It is nostalgic but the observation never blurs or softens, its is affectionate but never sentimental. It is also very funny. One would like it to go on and on . . ."

—Gordon Merrick, The New Republic

"'A Christmas Memory' is as tender and as beautifully done as anything you can read this year, or, for that matter, in a number of years."

—Dorothy Parker, Esquire

"'A Christmas Memory' is so moving that a seismograph ought to be picking up the tremors . . . something that I am sure will be an anthology classic from here to beyond."

—Leslie Hanscome, N.Y. World Telegram & Sun

"'A Christmas Memory' is simply the story of the love that two lonely people — a young boy, an old and childlike woman — have for each other. Nothing, he is saying in effect, is so important as unselfish love. It is one thing to say it and another to demonstrate it, and the fact that Mr. Capote dramatizes it with his old skill and a new directness is somehow the measure of his maturity as a writer."

—John K. Hutchens, N.Y. Herald Tribune

"'A Christmas Memory' is a beautiful tale of a Christmas tune twenty years ago with only two characters, really, a boy and an old woman. They make some fruitcakes. They go into the woods and come back with a tree. That's about all there is to it. . . . But what a story! . . . I just hope you've been good enough to deserve finding a copy of the book under your tree. If not, pray that someone will read 'A Christmas Memory' to you."

—John G. Fuller, The Saturday Review

A Christmas Memory

By Truman Capote

(1)

IMAGINE a morning in late November. A coming of winter morning more than twenty years ago. Consider the kitchen of a spreading old house in a country town. A great black stove is its main feature; but there is also a big round table and a fireplace with two rocking chairs placed in front of it. Just today the fireplace commenced its seasonal roar.

A woman with shorn white hair is standing at the kitchen window. She is wearing tennis shoes and a shapeless gray sweater over a summery calico dress. She is small and sprightly, like a bantam hen; but, due to a long youthful illness, her shoulders are pitifully hunched. Her face is remarkable — not unlike Lincoln's, craggy like that, and tinted by sun and wind; but it is delicate too, finely boned, and her eyes are sherry-colored and timid. "Oh, my," she exclaims, her breath smoking the window-pane, "it's fruitcake weather!"

The person to whom she is speaking is myself. I am seven; she is sixty-something. We are cousins, very distant ones, and we have lived together — well, as long as I can remember. Other people inhabit the house, relatives; and though they have power over us, and frequently make us cry, we are not, on the whole, too much aware of them. We are each other's best friend. She calls me Buddy, in memory of a boy who was formerly her best friend. The other Buddy died in the 1880's, when she was still a child. She is still a child.

"I knew it before I got out of bed," she says, turning away from the window with a purposeful excitement in her eyes. "The courthouse bell sounded so cold and clear. And there were no birds singing; they've gone to warmer country, yes indeed. Oh, Buddy, stop stuffing biscuit and fetch your buggy. Help me find my hat. We've thirty cakes to bake."

It's always the same: a morning arrives in November, and my friend, as though officially inaugurating the Christmas time of the year that exhilarates her imagination and fuels the blaze of her heart, announces: It's fruitcake weather! Fetch our buggy. Help me find my hat."

The hat is found, a straw cartwheel corsaged with velvet roses out-of-doors has faded: it once belonged to a more fashionable relative. Together, we guide our buggy, a dilapidated baby carriage, out to the garden and into a grove of pecan trees. The buggy is mine; that is, it was bought for me when I was born. It is made of wicker, rather unraveled, and the wheels wobble like a drunkard's legs. But it is a faithful object; springtimes, we take it to the woods and fill it with flowers, herbs, wild fern for our porch pots; in the summer, we pile it with picnic paraphernalia and sugar-cane fishing poles and roll it down to the edge of a creek; it has its winter uses, too: as a truck for hauling firewood from the yard to the kitchen, as a warm bed for Queenie, our tough little orange and white rat-terrier who has survived distemper and two rattlesnake bites. Queenie is trotting beside it now.

Three hours later we are back in the kitchen hulling a heaping buggy-load of windfall pecans. Our backs hurt from gathering them: how hard they were to find (the main crop having been shaken off the trees and sold by the orchard's owners, who are not us) among the concealing leaves, the frosted, deceiving grass. Caarackle! A cheery crunch, scraps of miniature thunder sound as the shells collapse and the golden mound of sweet oily ivory meat mounts in a milk glass bowl. Queenie begs to taste, and now and again my friend sneaks her a mite, though insisting we deprive ourselves. "We mustn't, Buddy. If we start, we won't stop. And there's scarcely enough as there is. For thirty cakes." The kitchen is growing dark. Dusk turns the window into a mirror; our reflections mingle with the rising moon as we work by the fireside in the firelight. At last, when the moon is quite high, we toss the final hull into the fire and, with joined sighs, watch it catch flame. The buggy is empty, the bowl is brimful.

We eat our supper (cold biscuits, bacon, blackberry jam) and discuss tomorrow. Tomorrow the kind of work I like best begins: buying. Cherries and citron, ginger and vanilla and canned Hawaiian pineapple, rinds and raisins and walnuts and whisky and oh, so much flour, butter, so many eggs, spices, flavorings: why, we'll need a pony to pull the buggy home.

But before these purchases can be made, there is the question of money. Neither of us has any. Except for skinflint sums persons in the house occasionally provide (a dime is considered very big money); or what we earn ourselves from various activities: holding rummage sales, selling buckets of hand-picked blackberries, jars of homemade jam and apple jelly and peach preserves, rounding up flowers for funerals and weddings. Once we won seventy-ninth prize, five dollars, in a national football contest. Not that we know a fool-thing about football. It's just that we enter any contest we hear about: at the moment our hopes are centered on the fifty-thousand-dollar Grand Prize being offered to name a new brand of coffee (we suggested "A.M."; and, after some hesitation, for my friend thought it perhaps sacrilegious, the slogan "A.M.! Amen!"). To tell the truth, our only really profitable enterprise was the Fun and Freak Museum we conducted in a back-yard woodshed two summers ago. The Fun was a stereopticon with slide views of Washington and New York lent us by a relative who had been to those places (she was furious when she discovered why we'd borrowed it); the Freak was a three-legged biddy-chicken hatched by one of our own hens. Everybody hereabouts wanted to see that biddy: we charged grownups a nickel, kids two cents. And took in a good twenty dollars before the museum shut down due to the decease of the main attraction.

But one way and another we do each year accumulate Christmas savings, a Fruitcake Fund. These moneys we keep hidden in an ancient bead purse under a loose board under the floor under a chamber pot under my friend's bed. The purse is seldom removed from this safe location except to make a deposit or, as happens every Saturday, a withdrawal; for on Saturdays I am allowed ten cents to go to the picture show. My friend has never been to a picture show, nor does she intend to: "I'd rather hear you tell the story, Buddy. That way I can imagine it more. Besides, a person my age shouldn't squander their eyes. When the Lord comes, let me see Him clear." In addition to never having seen a movie, she has never: eaten in a restaurant, traveled more than five miles from home, received or sent a telegram, read anything except funny papers and the Bible, worn cosmetics, cursed, wished someone harm, told a lie on purpose, let a hungry dog go hungry. Here are a few things she has done, does do: killed with a hoe the biggest rattlesnake ever seen in this county (sixteen rattles), dip snuff (secretly), tame hummingbirds (just try it) till they balance on her finger, tell ghost stories (we both believe in ghosts) so tingling they chill you in July, talk to herself, take walks in the rain, grow the prettiest japonicas in town, know the recipe for every sort of old-time Indian cure, including a magical wart-remover.

Now, with supper finished, we retire to the room in a faraway part of the house where my friend sleeps in a scrap-quilt-covered iron bed painted rose pink, her favorite color. Silently, wallowing in the pleasures of conspiracy, we take the bead purse from its secret place and spill its contents on the scrap quilt. Dollar bills, tightly rolled and green as May buds. Somber fifty-cent pieces, heavy enough to weight a dead man's eyes. Lovely dimes, the liveliest coin, the one that really jingles. Nickels and quarters, worn smooth as creek pebbles. But mostly a hateful heap of bitter-odored pennies. Last summer others in the house contracted to pay us a penny for every twenty-five flies we killed. Oh, the carnage of August: the flies that flew to heaven! Yet it was not work in which we took pride. And, as we sit counting pennies, it is as though we were back tabulating dead flies. Neither of us has a head for figures; we count slowly, lose track, start again. According to her calculations, we have $12.73. According to mine, exactly $13. "I do hope you're wrong, Buddy. We can't mess around with thirteen. The cakes will fall. Or put somebody in the cemetery. Why, I wouldn't dream of getting out of bed on the thirteenth." This is true: she always spends thirteenth in bed. So, to be on the safe side, we subtract a penny and toss it out the window.

Of the ingredients that go into our fruitcakes, whisky is the most expensive, as well as the hardest to obtain: State laws forbid its sale. But everybody knows you can buy a bottle from Mr. Haha Jones. And the next day, having completed our more prosaic shopping, we set out for Mr. Haha's business address, a "sinful" (to quote public opinion) fish-fry and dancing café down by the river. We've been there before, and on the same errand; but in previous years our dealings have been with Haha's wife, an iodine-dark Indian woman with brassy peroxidized hair and a dead-tired disposition. Actually, we've never laid eyes on her husband, though we've heard that he's an Indian too. A giant with razor scars across his cheeks. They call him Haha because he's so gloomy, a man who never laughs. As we approach his café (a large log cabin festooned inside and out with chains of garish-gay naked light bulbs and standing by the river's muddy edge under the shade of river trees where moss drifts through the branches like gray mist) our steps slow down. Even Queenie stops prancing and sticks close by. People have been murdered in Haha's café. Cut to pieces. Hit on the head. There's a case coming up in court next month. Naturally these goings-on happen at night when the colored lights cast crazy patterns and the victrola wails. In the daytime Haha's is shabby and deserted. I knock at the door, Queenie barks, my friend calls: "Mrs. Haha, ma'am? Anyone to home?"

Footsteps. The door opens. Our hearts overturn. It's Mr. Haha Jones himself! And he is a giant; he does have scars; he doesn't smile. No, he glowers at us through Satan-tilted eyes and demands to know: "What you want with Haha?"

For a moment we are too paralyzed to tell. Presently my friend half-finds her voice, a whispery voice at best: "If you please, Mr. Haha, we'd like a quart of your finest whisky."

His eyes tilt more. Would you believe it? Haha is smiling! Laughing, too. "Which one of you is a drinkin' man?"

"It's for making fruitcakes, Mr. Haha. Cooking."

This sobers him. He frowns. "That's no way to waste good whisky." Nevertheless, he retreats into the shadowed café and seconds later appears carrying a bottle of daisy yellow unlabeled liquor. He demonstrates its sparkle in the sunlight and says: "Two dollars."

We pay him with nickels and dimes and pennies. Suddenly, jangling the coins in his hand like a fistful of dice, his face softens. "Tell you what," he proposes, pouring the money back into our bead purse, "just send me one of them fruitcakes instead."

"Well," my friend remarks on our way home, "there's a lovely man. We'll put an extra cup of raisins in his cake."

The black stove, stoked with coal and firewood, glows like a lighted pumpkin. Eggbeaters whirl, spoons spin round in bowls of butter and sugar, vanilla sweetens the air, ginger spices it; melting, nose-tingling odors saturate the kitchen, suffuse the house, drift out to the world on puffs of chimney-smoke. In four days our work is done. Thirty-one cakes, dampened with whisky, bask on window sills and shelves.

Who are they for?

Friends. Not necessarily neighbor friends: indeed, the larger share are intended for persons we've met maybe once, perhaps not at all. People who've struck our fancy. Like President Roosevelt. Like the Reverend and Mrs. J. C. Lucey, Baptist missionaries to Borneo who lectured here last winter. Or the little knife grinder who comes through town twice a year. Or Abner Packer, the driver of the six o'clock bus from Mobile, who exchanges waves with us every day as he passes in a dust-cloud whoosh. Or the young Wistons, a California couple whose car one afternoon broke down outside the house and who spent a pleasant hour chatting with us on the porch (young Mr. Wiston snapped our picture, the only one we've ever had taken). Is it because my friend is shy with everyone except strangers that these strangers, and merest acquaintances, seem to us our truest friends? I think yes. Also, the scrapbooks we keep of thank-you's on White House stationery, time to time communications from California and Borneo, the knife grinder's penny post cards, make us feel connected to eventful worlds beyond the kitchen with its view of a sky that stops.

Now a nude December fig branch grates against the window. The kitchen is empty, the cakes are gone; yesterday we carted the last of them to the post office, where the cost of stamps turned our purse inside out. We're broke. That rather depresses me, but my friend insists on celebrating—with two inches of whisky left in Haha's bottle. Queenie has a spoonful in a bowl of coffee (she likes her coffee chicory-flavored and strong). The rest we divide between a pair of jelly glasses. We're both quite awed at the prospect of drinking straight whisky; the taste of it brings screwed-up expressions and sour shudders. But by-and-by we begin to sing, the two of us singing different songs simultaneously. I don't know the words to mine, just: Come on along, come on along, to the darktown strutters' ball. But I can dance: that's what I mean to be, a tap dancer in the movies. My dancing shadow rollicks on the walls; our voices rock the china-ware; we giggle: as if unseen hands were tickling us. Queenie rolls on her back, her paws plow the air, something like a grin stretches her black lips. Inside myself, I feel warm and sparky as those crumbling logs, carefree as the wind in the chimney. My friend waltzes round the stove, the hem of her poor calico skirt pinched between her fingers as though it were a party dress: Show me the way to go home, she sings, her tennis shoes squeaking on the floor, Show me the way to go home.

Enter: two relatives. Very angry. Potent with eyes that scold, tongues that scald. Listen to what they have to say, the words tumbling together into a wrathful tune: "A child of seven! whisky on his breath! are you out of your mind? feeding a child of seven! must be loony! road to ruination! remember Cousin Kate? Uncle Charlie? Uncle Charlie's brother-in-law? shame! scandal! humiliation! kneel, pray, beg the Lord!"

Queenie sneaks under the stove. My friend gazes at her shoes, her chin quivers, she lifts her skirt and blows her nose and runs to her room. Long after the town has gone to sleep and the house is silent except for the chimings of clocks and the sputter of fading fires, she is weeping into a pillow already as wet as a widow's handkerchief.

"Don't cry," I say, sitting at the bottom of her bed and shivering despite my flannel nightgown that smells of last winter's cough sirup, "don't cry," I beg, teasing her toes, tickling her feet, "you're too old for that."

"It's because," she hiccups, "I am too old. Old and funny."

"Not funny. Fun. More fun than anybody. Listen. If you don't stop crying you'll be so tired tomorrow we can't go cut a tree."

She straightens up. Queenie jumps on the bed (where Queenie is not allowed) to lick her cheeks. "I know where we'll find real pretty trees, Buddy. And holly, too. With berries big as your eyes. It's way off in the woods. Farther than we've ever been. Papa used to bring us Christmas trees from there; carry them on his shoulder. That's fifty years ago. Well, now: I can't wait for morning."

Morning. Frozen rime lusters the grass; the sun, round as an orange and orange as hot-weather moons, balances on the horizon, burnishes the silvered winter woods. A wild turkey calls. A renegade hog grunts in the undergrowth. Soon, by the edge of knee-deep, rapid-running water, we have to abandon the buggy. Queenie wades the stream first, paddles across barking complaints at the swiftness of the current, the pneumonia-making coldness of it. We follow, holding our shoes and equipment (a hatchet, a burlap sack) above our heads. A mile more: of chastising thorns, burrs and briars that catch at our clothes; of rusty pine needles brilliant with gaudy fungus and molted feathers. Here, there, a flash, a flutter, an ecstasy of shrillings remind us that not all the birds have flown south. Always, the path unwinds through lemony sun pools and pitch vine tunnels. Another creek to cross: a disturbed armada of speckled trout froths the water round us, and frogs the size of plates practice belly flops; beaver workmen are building a dam. On the farther shore, Queenie shakes herself and trembles. My friend shivers, too: not with cold but enthusiasm. One of her hat's ragged roses sheds a petal as she lifts her head and inhales the pine-heavy air. "We're almost there; can you smell it, Buddy?" she says, as though we were approaching an ocean.

And, indeed, it is a kind of ocean. Scented acres of holiday trees, prickly-leaved holly. Red berries shiny as Chinese bells: black crows swoop upon them screaming. Having stuffed our burlap sack with enough greenery and crimson to garland a dozen windows, we set about choosing a tree. "It should be," muses my friend, "twice as tall as a boy. So a boy can't steal the star." The one we pick is twice as tall as me. A brave handsome brute that survives thirty hatchet strokes before it kneels with a creaking rending cry. Lugging it like a kill, we commence the long trek out. Every few yards we abandon the struggle, sit down and pant. But we have the strength of triumphant huntsmen; that and the tree's virile, icy perfume revive us, goad us on. Many compliments accompany our sunset return along the red clay road to town; but my friend is sly and noncommittal when passersby praise the treasure perched in our buggy: what a fine tree and where did it come from? "Yonderways," she murmurs vaguely. Once a car stops and the rich mill owner's lazy wife leans out and whines: "Giveya two-bits cash for that ol tree." Ordinarily my friend is afraid of saying no; but on this occasion she promptly shakes her head: "We wouldn't take a dollar." The mill owner's wife persists. "A dollar, my foot! Fifty cents. That's my last offer. Goodness, woman, you can get another one." In answer, my friend gently reflects: "I doubt it. There's never two of anything."

Home: Queenie slumps by the fire and sleeps till tomorrow, snoring loud as a human.

A trunk in the attic contains: a shoe box of ermine tails (off the opera cape of a curious lady who once rented a room in the house), coils of frazzled tinsel gone gold with age, one silver star, a brief hope of dilapidated, undoubtedly dangerous candy-like light bulbs. Excellent decorations, as far as they go, which isn't far enough: my friend wants our tree to blaze "like a Baptist window," droop with weighty snows of ornament. But we can't afford the made-in-Japan splendors at the five-and-dime. So we do what we've always done: sit for days at the kitchen table with scissors and crayons and stacks of colored paper. I make sketches and my friend cuts them out: lots of cats, fish too (because they're easy to draw), some apples, some watermelons, a few winged angels devised from saved-up sheets of Hershey bar tin foil. We use safety pins to attach these creations to the tree; as a final touch, we sparkle the branches with shredded cotton (picked in August for this purpose). My friend, surveying the effect, clasps her hands together. "Now honest, Buddy. Doesn't it look good enough to eat?" Queenie tries to eat an angel.

After weaving and ribboning holly wreaths for all the front windows, our next project is the fashioning of family gifts. Tie-dye scarves for the ladies, for the men a home-brewed lemon and licorice and aspirin sirup to be taken "at the first Symptoms of a Cold and after Hunting." But when it comes time for making each other's gift, my friend and I separate to work secretly. I would like to buy her a pearl-handled knife, a radio, a whole pound of chocolate-covered cherries (we tasted some once, and she always swears: "I could live on them, Buddy, Lord yes I could — and that's not taking His name in vain"). Instead, I am building her a kite. She would like to give me a bicycle (she's said so on several million occasions: "If only I could, Buddy. It's bad enough in life to do without something you want; but confound it, what gets my goat is not being able to give somebody something you want them to have. Only one of these days I will, Buddy. Locate you a bike. Don't ask how. Steal it, maybe"). Instead, I'm fairly certain that she is building me a kite—the same as last year, and the year before; the year before that we exchanged sling-shots. All of which is fine by me. For we are champion kite-fliers who study the wind like sailors; my friend, more accomplished than I, can get a kite aloft when there isn't enough breeze to carry clouds.

Christmas eve afternoon we scrape together a nickel and go to the butcher's to buy Queenie's traditional gift, a good gnawable beef bone. The bone, wrapped in funny paper, is placed high in the tree near the silver star. Queenie knows it's there. She squats at the foot of the tree staring up in a trance of greed: when bedtime arrives she refuses to budge. Her excitement is equaled by my own. I kick the covers and turn my pillow as though it were a scorching summer's night. Somewhere a rooster crows: falsely, for the sun is still on the other side of the world.

"Buddy, are you awake?" It is my friend, calling from her room, which is next to mine; and an instant later she is sitting on my bed holding a candle. "Well, I can't sleep a hoot," she declares. "My mind's jumping like a jack rabbit. Buddy, do you think Mrs. Roosevelt will serve our cake at dinner?" We huddle in the bed, and she squeezes my hand I-love-you. "Seems like your hand used to be so much smaller. I guess I hate to see you grow up. When you're grown up, will we still be friends?" I say always. "But I feel so bad, Buddy. I wanted so bad to give you a bike. I tried to sell my cameo Papa gave me. Buddy," she hesitates, as though embarrassed, "—I made you another kite." Then I confess that I made her one, too; and we laugh. The candle burns too short to hold. Out it goes, exposing the starlight, the stars spinning at the window like a visible caroling that slowly, slowly daybreak silences. Possibly we doze; but the beginnings of dawn splash us like cold water: we're up, wide-eyed and wandering while we wait for others to waken. Quite deliberately my friend drops a kettle on the kitchen floor. I tap-dance in front of closed doors. One by one the household emerges, looking as though they'd like to kill us both; but it's Christmas, so they can't. First, a gorgeous breakfast: just everything you can imagine — from flapjacks and fried squirrel to hominy grits and honey-in-the-comb. Which puts everyone in a good humor except my friend and I. Frankly, we're so impatient to get at the presents we can't eat a mouthful.

Well, I'm disappointed. Who wouldn't be? With socks, a Sunday school shirt, some handkerchiefs, a hand-me-down sweater and a year's subscription to a religious magazine for children, The Little Shepherd. It makes me boil. It really does.

My friend has a better haul. A sack of Satsumas, that's her best present. She is proudest, however, of a white wool shawl knitted by her married sister. But she says her favorite gift is the kite I built her. And it is very beautiful; though not as beautiful as the one she made me, which is blue and scattered with gold and green Good Conduct stars; moreover, my name is painted on it, "Buddy."

"Buddy, the wind is blowing."

The wind is blowing, and nothing will do till we've run to a pasture below the house where Queenie has scooted to bury her bone (and where, a winter hence, Queenie will be buried too). There, plunging through the healthy waist-high grass, we unreel our kites, feel them twitching at the string like sky fish as they swim into the wind. Satisfied, sun-warmed, we sprawl in the grass and peel Satsumas and watch our kites cavort. Soon I forget the socks and hand-me-down sweater. I'm as happy as if we'd already won the fifty-thousand-dollar Grand Prize in that coffee-naming contest.

"My, how foolish I am!" my friend cries, suddenly alert, like a woman remembering too late she has biscuits in the oven. "You know what I've always thought?" she asks in a tone of discovery, and not smiling at me but a point beyond. "I've always thought a body would have to be sick and dying before they saw the Lord. And I imagined that when he came it would be like looking at the Baptist window: pretty as colored glass with the sun pouring through, such a shine you don't know it's getting dark. And it's been a comfort: to think of that shine taking away all the spooky feeling. But I'll wager it never happens. I'll wager at the very end a body realizes the Lord has already shown himself. That things as they are," her hand circles in a gesture that gathers clouds and kites and grass and Queenie pawing earth over her bone, "just what they've always seen, was seeing him. As for me, I could leave the world with today in my eyes."

This is our last Christmas together.

Life separates us. Those who Know Best decide that I belong in a military school. And so follows a miserable succession of bugle-blowing prisons, grim reveille-ridden summer camps. I have a new home, too. But it doesn't count. Home is where my friend is, and there I never go.

And there she remains, puttering around the kitchen. Alone with Queenie. Then alone. ("Buddy dear," she writes in her hard-to-read script, "yesterday Jim Macy's horse kicked Queenie bad. Be thankful she didn't feel much. I wrapped her in a Fine Linen sheet and rode her in the buggy down to Simpson's pasture where she can be with all her Bones . . ."). For a few Novembers she continues to bake her fruitcakes singlehanded! not as many, but some; and, of course, she always sends me "the best of the batch." Also, in every letter she encloses a dime wadded in toilet paper: "See a picture show and write me the story." But gradually in her letters she tends to confuse me with her other friend, the Buddy who died in the 1880's; more and more thirteenthths are not the only days she stays in bed: a morning arrives in November, a leafless birdless coming of winter morning, when she cannot rouse herself to exclaim: "Oh my, it's fruitcake weather!"

And when that happens, I know it. A message saying so merely confirms a piece of news some secret vein had already received, severing from me an irreplaceable part of myself, letting it loose like a kite on a broken string. That is why, walking across a school campus on this particular December morning, I keep searching the sky. As if I expected to see, rather like hearts, a lost pair of kites hurrying toward heaven.

A CHRISTMAS MEMORY

A fond remembrance of holidays past spent with a cherished loved one

By Truman Capote

I imagine a morning in late November. A coming of winter morning more than twenty years ago. Consider the kitchen of a spreading old house in a country town. A great black stove is its main feature; but there is also a big round table and a fireplace with two rocking chairs placed in front of it. Just today the fireplace commenced its seasonal roar. A woman with shorn white hair is standing at the kitchen window. She is wearing tennis shoes and a shapeless gray sweater over a summery calico dress. She is small and sprightly, like a bantam hen; but, due to a long youthful illness, her shoulders are pitifully hunched. Her face is remarkable — not unlike Lincoln's, craggy like that, and tinted by the sun and wind, but it is delicate too, finely boned, and her eyes are sherry-colored and timid. "Oh my," she exclaims, her breath smoking the windowpane, "it's fruitcake weather!"

The person to whom she is speaking is myself. I am seven; she is sixty something. We are cousins, very distant ones, and we have lived together well, as long as I can remember. Other people inhabit the house, relatives, and though they have power over us, and frequently make us cry, we are not, on the whole, too much aware of them. We are each other's best friend. She calls me Buddy, in memory of a boy who was formerly her best friend. The other Buddy died in the 1880's, when she was still a child. She is still a child.

"I knew it before I got out of bed," she says, turning away from the window with a purposeful excitement in her eyes. "The courthouse bell sounded so cold and clear. And there were no birds singing; they've gone to warmer country, yes indeed. Oh, Buddy, stop stuffing biscuit and fetch our buggy. Help me find my hat. We've thirty cakes to bake."

It's always the same: a morning arrives in November, and my friend, as though officially inaugurating the Christmas time of year that exhilarates her imagination and fuels the blaze of her heart, announces: "It's fruitcake weather! Fetch our buggy. Help me find my hat."

The hat is found, a straw cartwheel corsaged with velvet roses out-of doors has faded: it once belonged to a more fashionable relative. Together, we guide our buggy, a dilapidated baby carriage, out to the garden and into a grove of pecan trees. The buggy is mine; that is, it was bought for me when I was born. It is made of wicker, rather unraveled, and the wheels wobble like a drunkard's legs. But it is a faithful object, springtimes, we take it to the woods and fill it with flowers, herbs, wild fern for our porch pots, in the summer, we pile it with picnic paraphernalia and sugar cane fishing poles and roll it down to the edge of a creek, it has its winter uses, too: as a truck for hauling firewood from the yard to the kitchen, as a warm bed for Queenie, our tough little orange and white rat terrier who has survived distemper and two rattlesnake bites. Queenie is trotting beside it now.

Three hours later we are back in the kitchen hulling a heaping buggyload of windfall pecans. Our backs hurt from gathering them: how hard they were to find (the main crop having been shaken off the trees and sold by the orchard's owners, who are not us) among the concealing leaves, the frosted, deceiving grass. Caarackle! A cheery crunch, scraps of miniature thunder sound as the shells collapse and the golden mound of sweet oily ivory meat mounts in the milk-glass bowl. Queenie begs to taste, and now and again my friend sneaks her a mite, though insisting we deprive ourselves. "We mustn't, Buddy,

If we start, we won't stop. And there's scarcely enough as there is. For thirty cakes." The kitchen is growing dark. Dusk turns the window into a mirror: our reflections mingle with the rising moon as we work by the fireside in the firelight. At last, when the moon is quite high, we toss the final hull into the fire and, with joined sighs, watch it catch flame. The buggy is empty, the bowl is brimful.

We eat our supper (cold biscuits, bacon, blackberry jam) and discuss tomorrow. Tomorrow the kind of work I like best begins buying. Cherries and citron, ginger and vanilla and canned Hawaiian pineapple, rins and raisins and walnuts and whiskey and oh, so much flour, butter, so many eggs, spices, flavorings: why, we'll need a pony to pull the buggy home.

But before these purchases can be made, there is the question of money. Neither of us has any. Except for skinflint sums persons in the house occasionally provide (a dime is considered very big money); or what we earn ourselves from various activities: holding rummage sales, selling buckets of hand-picked blackberries, jars of homemade jam and apple jelly and peach preserves, rounding up flowers for funerals and weddings. Once we won seventy-ninth prize, five dollars, in a national football contest. Not that we know a fool thing about football. It's just that we enter any contest we hear about: at the moment our hopes are centered on the fifty-thousand dollar Grand Prize being offered to name a new brand of coffee (we suggested "A.M.", and, after some hesitation, for my friend thought it perhaps sacrilegious, the slogan "A.M.! Amen!"). To tell the truth, our only really profitable enterprise was the Fun and Freak Museum we conducted in a back-yard woodshed two summers ago. The Fun was a stereopticon with slide views of Washington and New York lent us by a relative who had been to those places (she was furious when she discovered why we'd borrowed it), the Freak was a three-legged biddy chicken hatched by one of our own hens. Everybody hereabouts wanted to see that biddy: we charged grownups a nickel, kids two cents. And took in a good twenty dollars before the museum shut down due to the decease of the main attraction.

But one way or another we do each year accumulate Christmas savings, a Fruitcake Fund. These moneys we keep hidden in an ancient bead purse under a loose board under the floor under a chamber pot under my friend's bed. The purse is seldom removed from this safe location except to make a deposit, or, as happens every Saturday, a withdrawal; for on Saturdays I am allowed ten cents to go to the picture show. My friend has never been to a picture show, nor does she intend to: "I'd rather hear you tell the story, Buddy. That way I can imagine it more. Besides, a person my age shouldn't squander their eyes. When the Lord comes, let me see him clear." In addition to never having seen a movie, she has never: eaten in a restaurant, traveled more than five miles from home, received or sent a telegram, read anything except funny papers and the Bible, worn cosmetics, cursed, wished someone harm, told a lie on purpose, let a hungry dog go hungry. Here are a few things she has done, does do: killed with a hoe the biggest rattlesnake every seen in this county (sixteen rattles), dip snuff (secretly), tame hummingbirds (just try it) till they balance on her finger, tell ghost stories (we both believe in ghosts) so tingling they chill you in July, talk to herself, take walks in the rain, grow the prettiest japonicas in town, know the recipe for every sort of old-time Indian cure, including a magical wart remover.

Now, with supper finished, we retire to the room in a faraway part of the house where my friend sleeps in a scrap-quilt-covered iron bed painted rose pink, her favorite color. Silently, wallowing in the pleasures of conspiracy, we take the bead purse from its secret place and spill its contents on the scrap quilt. Dollar bills, tightly rolled and green as May buds. Somber fifty-cent pieces, heavy enough to weight a dead man's eyes. Lovely dimes, the liveliest coin, the one that really jingles. Nickels and quarters, worn smooth as creek pebbles. But mostly a hateful heap of bitter-odored pennies. Last summer others in the house contracted to pay us a penny for every twenty-five flies we killed. Oh, the carnage of August: the flies that flew to heaven! Yet it was not work in which we took pride. And, as we sit counting pennies, it is as though we were back tabulating dead flies. Neither of us has a head for figures; we count slowly, lose track, start again. According to her calculations, we have $12.73. According to mine, exactly $13. "I do hope you're wrong, Buddy. We can't mess around with thirteen. The cakes will fall. Or put somebody in the cemetery. Why, I wouldn't dream of getting out of bed on the thirteenth." This is true: she always spends thirteenth in bed. So, to be on the safe side, we subtract a penny and toss it out the window.

If the ingredients that go into our fruitcakes, whiskey is the most expensive, as well as the hardest to obtain. State laws forbid its sale. But everybody knows you can buy a bottle from Mr. Haha Jones. And the next day, having completed our more prosaic shopping, we set out for Mr. Haha's business address, a "sinful" (to quote public opinion) fish-fry and dancing café down by the river. We've been there before, and on the same errand; but in previous years our dealings have been with Haha's wife, an iodine-dark Indian woman with brassy peroxidized hair and a dead-tired disposition. Actually, we've never laid eyes on her husband, though we've heard that he's an Indian too. A giant with razor scars across his cheeks. They call him Haha because he's so gloomy, a man who never laughs. As we approach his café (a large log cabin festooned inside and out with chains of garish gay naked light bulbs and standing by the river's muddy edge under the shade of river trees where moss drifts through the branches like gray mist) our steps slow down. Even Queenie stops prancing and sticks close by. People have been murdered in Haha's café. Cut to pieces. Hit on the head. There's a case coming up in court next month. Naturally these goings-on happen at night when the colored lights cast crazy patterns and the victrola wails. In the daytime Haha's is shabby and deserted. I knock at the door. Queenie barks, my friend calls. "Mrs. Haha, ma'am? Anyone to home?"

Footsteps. The door opens. Our hearts overturn. It's Mr. Haha Jones himself! And he is a giant, he does have scars; he doesn't smile. No, he glowers at us through Satan-tilted eyes and demands to know: "What you want with Haha?"

For a moment we are too paralyzed to tell. Presently my friend half-finds her voice, a whispery voice at best: "If you please, Mr. Haha, we'd like a quart of your finest whiskey."

His eyes tilt more. Would you believe it? Haha is smiling! Laughing, too. "Which one of you is a drinkin' man?"

"It's for making fruitcakes, Mr. Haha. Cooking."

This sobers him. He frowns. "That's no way to waste good whiskey." Nevertheless, he retreats into the shadowed café and seconds later appears carrying a bottle of daisy yellow unlabeled liquor. He demonstrates its sparkle in the sunlight and says: "Two dollars."

We pay him with nickels and dimes and pennies. Suddenly, jangling the coins in his hand like a fistful of dice, his face softens. "Tell you what," he proposes, pouring the money back into our bead purse, "just send me one of them fruitcakes instead."

"Well," my friend remarks on our way home, "There's a lovely man. We'll put an extra cup of raisins in his cake."

The black stove, stoked with coal and firewood, glows like a lighted pumpkin. Eggbeaters whirl, spoons spin round in bowls of butter and sugar, vanilla sweetens the air, ginger spices it; melting, nose-tingling odors saturate the kitchen, suffuse the house, drift out to the world on puffs of chimney smoke. In four days our work is done. Thirty-one cakes, dampened with whiskey, bask on window sills and shelves.

Who are they for?

Friends. Not necessarily neighbor friends: indeed, the larger share are intended for persons we've met maybe once, perhaps not at all. People who've struck our fancy. Like President Roosevelt. Like the Reverend and Mrs. J.C. Lucey, Baptist missionaries to Borneo who lectured here last winter. Or the little knife grinder who comes through town twice a year. Or Abner Packer, the driver of the six o'clock bus from Mobile, who exchanges waves with us every day as he passes in a dust-cloud whoosh. Or the young Wistons, a California couple whose car one afternoon broke down outside the house and who spent a pleasant hour chatting with us on the porch (young Mr. Wiston snapped our picture, the only one we've ever had taken). Is it because my friend is shy with everyone except strangers that these strangers, and merest acquaintances, seem to us our truest friends? I think yes. Also, the scrapbooks we keep of thank you's on White House stationery, time-to-time communications from California and Borneo, the knife grinder's penny post cards, make us feel connected to eventful worlds beyond the kitchen with its view of a sky that stops.

Now a nude December fig branch grates against the window. The kitchen is empty, the cakes are gone; yesterday we carted the last of them to the post office, where the cost of stamps turned our purse inside out. We're broke. That rather depresses me, but my friend insists on celebrating — with two inches of whiskey left in Haha's bottle. Queenie has a spoonful in a bowl of coffee (she likes her coffee chicory flavored and strong). The rest we divide between a pair of jelly glasses. We're both quite awed at the prospect of drinking straight whiskey; the taste of it brings screwed-up expressions and sour shudders. But by and by we begin to sing, the two of us singing different songs simultaneously. I don't know the words to mine, just. Come on along, come on along, to the dark-town strutters' ball. But I can dance — that's what I mean to be, a tap dancer in the movies. My dancing shadow rollicks on the walls; our voices rock the chinaware; we giggle, as if unseen hands were tickling us. Queenie rolls on her back, her paws plow the air, something like a grin stretches her black lips. Inside myself, I feel warm and sparky as those crumbling logs, carefree as the wind in the chimney. My friend waltzes round the stove, the hem of her poor calico skirt pinched between her fingers as though it were a party dress. Show me the way to go home, she sings, her tennis shoes squeaking on the floor. Show me the way to go home.

Enter: two relatives. Very angry. Potent with eyes that scold, tongues that scald. Listen to what they have to say, the words tumbling together into a wrathful tune: "A child of seven! whiskey on his breath! are you out of your mind? feeding a child of seven! must be loony! road to ruin! remember Cousin Kate? Uncle Charlie? Uncle Charlie's brother-in-law? shame! scandal! humiliation! kneel, pray, beg the Lord!"

Queenie sneaks under the stove. My friend gazes at her shoes, her chin quivers, she lifts her skirt and blows her nose and runs to her room. Long after the town has gone to sleep and the house is silent except for chiming of clocks and the sputter of fading fires, she is weeping into a pillow already as wet as a widow's handkerchief.

"Don't cry," I say, sitting at the bottom of her bed and shivering despite my flannel nightgown that smells of last winter's cough syrup, "don't cry," I beg, teasing her toes, tickling her feet, "you're too old for that."

"It's because," she hiccups, "I am too old. Old and funny."

"Not funny. Fun. More fun than anybody. Listen. If you don't stop crying you'll be so tired tomorrow we can't go cut a tree."

She straightens up. Queenie jumps on the bed (where Queenie is not allowed) to lick her cheeks. "I know where we'll find real pretty trees, Buddy. And holly, too. With berries big as your eyes. It's way off in the woods. Farther than we've ever been. Papa used to bring us Christmas trees from there: carry them on his shoulder. That's fifty years ago. Well, now: I can't wait for morning."

Morning. Frozen rime lusters the grass; the sun, round as an orange and orange as hot-weather moons, balances on the horizon, burnishes the silvered winter woods. A wild turkey calls. A renegade hog grunts in the undergrowth. Soon, by the edge of knee-deep, rapid running water, we have to abandon the buggy. Queenie wades the stream first, paddles across barking complaints at the swiftness of the current, the pneumonia making coldness of it. We follow, holding our shoes and equipment (a hatchet, a burlap sack) above our heads. A mile more: of chastising thorns, burs and briars that catch at our clothes; of rusty pine needles brilliant with gaudy fungus and molted feathers. Here, there, a flash, a flutter, an ecstasy of shrillings remind us that not all the birds have flown south. Always, the path unwinds through lemony sun pools and pitch vine tunnels. Another creek to cross: a disturbed armada of speckled trout froths the water round us, and frogs the size of plates practice belly flops, beaver workmen are building a dam. On the farther shore, Queenie shakes herself and trembles. My friend shivers, too: not with cold but enthusiasm. One of her hat's ragged roses sheds a petal as she lifts her head and inhales the pine heavy air. "We're almost there; can you smell it, Buddy?" she says, as though we were approaching an ocean.

And, indeed, it is a kind of ocean. Scented areas of holiday trees, prickly leafed holly. Red berries shiny as Chinese bells: black crows swoop upon them screaming. Having stuffed our burlap sacks with enough greenery and crimson to garland a dozen windows, we set about choosing a tree. "It should be," muses my friend, "twice as tall as a boy. So a boy can't steal the star." The one we pick is twice as tall as me. A brave handsome brute that survives thirty hatchet strokes before it keels with a creaking rending cry. Lugging it like a kill, we commence the long trek out. Every few yards we abandon the struggle, sit down and pant. But we have the strength of triumphant huntsmen, that and the tree's vinile, icy perfume revive us, goad us on. Many compliments accompany our sunset return along the red clay road to town; but my friend is sly and noncommittal when passers by praise the treasure perched in our buggy: what a fine tree and where did it come from? "Yonderways," she murmurs vaguely. Once a car stops and the rich mill owner's lazy wife leans out and whines: "Giveya two-bits cash for that ol tree." Ordinarily my friend is afraid of saying no; but on this occasion she promptly shakes her head: "We wouldn't take a dollar." The mill owner's wife persists. "A dollar, my foot! fifty cents. That's my last offer. Goodness, woman, you can get another one." In answer, my friend gently reflects: "I doubt it. There's never two of anything."

Home: Queenie slumps by the fire and sleeps till tomorrow, snoring loud as a human.

A trunk in the attic contains: a shoebox of ermine tails (off the opera cape of a curious lady who once rented a room in the house), coils of frazzled tinsel gone gold with age, one silver star, a brief rope of dilapidated, undoubtedly dangerous candy-like light bulbs. Excellent decorations, as far as they go, which isn't far enough. My friend wants our tree to blaze "like a Baptist window," droop with weighty snows of ornament. But we can't afford the made-in-Japan splendors at the five-and-dime. So we do what we've always done: sit for days at the kitchen table with scissors and crayons and stacks of colored paper. I make sketches and my friend cuts them out: lots of cats, fish too (because they're easy to draw), some apples, some watermelons, a few winged angels devised from saved-up sheets of Hershey-bar tin foil. We use safety pins to attach these creations to the tree, as a final touch, we sprinkle the branches with shredded cotton (picked in August for this purpose). My friend, surveying the effort, clasps her hands together. "Now honest, Buddy. Doesn't it look good enough to eat?" Queenie tries to eat an angel.

After weaving and ribboning holly wreaths for all the front windows, our next project is the fashioning of family gifts. Tie-dye scarves for the ladies, for the men a home-brewed lemon and licorice and aspirin syrup to be taken "at the first Symptoms of a Cold and after Hunting." But when it comes time for making each other's gift, my friend and I separate to work secretly. I would like to buy her a pearl-handled knife, a radio, a whole pound of chocolate-covered cherries (we tasted some once and she always swears, "I could live on them, Buddy. Lord yes I could — and that's not taking His name in vain") Instead, I am building her a kite. She would like to give me a bicycle (she's said so on several million occasions: "If only I could, Buddy. It's bad enough in life to do without something you want, but confound it, what gets my goat is not being able to give somebody something you want them to have. Only one of these days I will, Buddy. Locate you a bike. Don't ask me how. Steal it, maybe"). Instead, I'm fairly certain that she is building me a kite — the same as last year, and the year before: the year before that we exchanged slingshots. All of which is fine by me. For we are champion kite fliers who study the wind like sailors, my friend, more accomplished than I, can get a kit aloft when there isn't enough breeze to carry clouds.

Christmas Eve afternoon we scape together a nickel and go to the butcher's to buy Queenie's traditional gift, a good gnawable beef bone. The bone, wrapped in funny paper, is placed high in the tree near the silver star. Queenie knows it's there. She squats at the foot of the tree staring up in a trance of greed: when bedtime arrives she refuses to budge. Her excitement is equaled by my own. I kick the covers and turn my pillow as though it were a scorching summer's night. Somewhere a rooster crows: falsely, for the sun is still on the other side of the world.

"Buddy, are you awake?" It is my friend, calling from her room, which is next to mine, and an instant later she is sitting on my bed holding a candle. "Well, I can't sleep a hoot," she declares. "My mind's jumping like a jack rabbit. Buddy, do you think Mrs. Roosevelt will serve our cake at dinner?" We huddle in the bed, and she squeezes my hand I love-you. "Seems like your hand used to be so much smaller. I guess I hate to see you grow up. When you're grown up, will we still be friends?" I say always. "But I feel so bad, Buddy. I wanted so bad to give you a bike. I tried to sell my cameo Papa gave me. Buddy —" she hesitates, as though embarrassed — "I made you another kite." Then I confess that I made her one, too, and we laugh. The candle burns too short to hold. Out it goes, exposing the starlight, the stars spinning at the window like a visible caroling that slowly, slowly daybreak silences. Possibly we doze; but the beginnings of dawn splash us like cold water; we're up, wide eyed and wandering while we wait for others to waken. Quite deliberately my friend drops a kettle on the kitchen floor. I tap-dance in front of closed doors. One by one the household emerges, looking as though they'd like to kill us both, but it's Christmas, so they can't. First, a gorgeous breakfast. Just everything you can imagine — from flapjacks and fried squirrel to hominy grits and honey-in-the-comb. Which puts everyone in a good humor except my friend and I. Frankly, we're so impatient to get at the presents we can't eat a mouthful.

Well, I'm disappointed. Who wouldn't be? With socks, a Sunday school shirt, some handkerchiefs, a hand-me-down sweater and a year's subscription to a religious magazine for children, The Little Shepherd. It makes me boil. It really does.

My friend has a better haul. A sack of Satsumas, that's her best present. She is proudest, however, of a white wool shawl knitted by her married sister. But she says her favorite gift is the kite I built her. And it is very beautiful; though not as beautiful as the one she made me, which is blue and scattered with gold and green Good Conduct stars, moreover, my name is painted on it, "Buddy."

"Buddy, the wind is blowing."

The wind is blowing, and nothing will do till we've run to a pasture below the house where Queenie has scooted to bury her bone (and where, a winter hence, Queenie will be buried, too.) There, plunging through the healthy waist high grass, we unreel our kites, feel them twitching at the string like sky fish as they swim into the wind. Satisfied, sun warmed, we sprawl in the grass and peel Satsumas and watch our kites cavort. Soon I forget the socks and hand-me-down sweater. I'm as happy as if we'd already won the fifty-thousand-dollar Grand Prize in that coffee-naming contest.

"My, how foolish I am!" my friend cries, suddenly alert, like a woman remembering too late she has biscuits in the oven. "You know what I've always thought?" she asks in a tone of discovery, and not smiling at me but a point beyond. "I've always thought a body would have to be sick and dying before they saw the Lord. And I imagined that when He came it would be like looking at the Baptist window: pretty as colored glass with the sun pouring through, such a shine you don't know it's getting dark. And it's been a comfort: to think of that shine taking away all the spooking feeling. But I'll wager it never happens. I'll wager at the very end a body realizes the Lord has already shown Himself. That things as they are" — her hand circles in a gesture that gathers clouds and kites and grass and Queenie pawing earth over her bone — "just what they've always seen, was seeing Him. As for me, I could leave the world with today in my eyes."

This is our last Christmas together. Life separates us. Those who Know Best decide that I belong in a military school. And so follows a miserable succession of bugle blowing prisons, grim reveille-ridden summer camps. I have a new home too. But it doesn't count. Home is where my friend is, and there I never go. And there she remains, pattering around the kitchen. Alone with Queenie. Then alone. ("Buddy dear," she writes in her wild hard-to-read script, "yesterday Jim Macy's horse kicked Queenie bad. Be thankful she didn't feel much. I wrapped her in a Fine Linen sheet and rode her in the buggy down to Simpson's pasture where she can be with all her Bones..."). For a few Novembers she continues to bake her fruitcakes single-handed; not as many, but some: and, of course, she always sends me "the best of the batch." Also, in every letter she encloses a dime wadded in toilet paper: "See a picture show and write me the story." But gradually in her letters she tends to confuse me with her other friend, the Buddy who died in the 1880's; more and more thirteenth are not the only days she stays in bed: a morning arrives in November, a leafless birdless coming of winter morning, when she cannot rouse herself to exclaim: "Oh my, it's fruitcake weather!"

And when that happens, I know it. A message saying so merely confirms a piece of news some secret vein had already received, severing from me an irreplaceable part of myself, letting it loose like a kite on a broken string. That is why, walking across a school campus on this particular December morning, I keep searching the sky. As if I expected to see, rather like hearts, a lost pair of kites hurrying toward heaven.

The column "Dishin the Dirt" that is given below appeared in The Scrantonian (Sunday, July 21, 1974, p. 56). An original copy of that column was given to SRP by HLRP during the summer of 1974--it is from that original copy that the copy that is given below was made. Contained in the newspaper column in question are three items of interest: one about The Homestead Golf Course, one about SRP, one about Lakeland Golf Course.

56—Sun., July 21, 1974

Dishin' the Dirt

The University of Scranton, true to tradition, went out of town to hire an athletic director to replace the one they brought in from Rochester in 1968 * * * At the rate reservations are being made, the 1974 Area Hall of Fame dinner Sept. 22 at the Scranton Elks Club will be a complete sellout a month before the event * * * Big John Schmelfenig, the all-sports official, set some sort of a record at the Federal Bowling League clambake at McDonnell's Grove when he scored nine straight ringers while posting a 24-1 record in quoit competition * * * Scrantonian-Tribune League bowlers Irene Sherbinko, Lee Chobey and Louise Kranick watched all the big ones get away during their annual fishing trip to the Bernice and Stanley Zelno estate at Perth, Ontario, Canada * * * Ed 'Red' Coleman, the ex-University of Scranton coach who ranked as one of the region's top basketball officials for many years, is a surgical patient at Mercy Hospital; also in the Mercy is another ex-basketball official, Ward Stein, who worked in the old State League when the pros played inside nets * * * Elmhurst Country Club will host the annual golf tournament sponsored by the Lackawanna Bar Association Friday, Aug. 16; District Attorney Paul Mazzoni is listed as one of the early favorites * * * Art Johnson, the general manager of the Shamrock Racing Association currently running at Pocono Downs, visited New York with his family for the first time last Wednesday; they watched the Yankees lose to Texas at Shea Stadium and enjoyed every minute of their stay; they hail from New Mexico * * * Talkative Muhammad Ali, the ex-heavyweight champion, made a profit of some $73,000 when he sold his Cherry Hill home last week; he bought it for $102,000 back in 1971 and sold it for $175,000.

THE RENAISSANCE AND CUBIST CONCEPTIONS OF SPACE AND ART IN THE NINETEENTH-CENTURY FRENCH NOVEL: A STUDY OF THE FORM AND CONTENT OF THE DESCRIPTIONS OF LANDSCAPE IN ATALA, RENÉ, ILLUSIONS PERDUES, LA CHARTREUSE DE PARME, MADAME BOVARY,
LE VENTRE DE PARIS, AND A REBOURS, AND OF THE FORM AND CONTENT OF THOSE NOVELS SEEN AS AUTONOMOUS AESTHETIC PHENOMENA

POWELL, S. Robert, Ph.D.
Indiana University, 1974

Chateaubriand, Balzac, Stendhal, Flaubert, and Zola all develop and utilize in their novels spatial and aesthetic principles which were rudimentarily established during the Renaissance in the late fifteenth and sixteenth century. The structural forms of Atala, René, Illusions Perdues, La Chartreuse de Parme, Madame Bovary, and Le Ventre de Paris, and of the descriptions of landscape contained in those novels--whether external or internal spatial forms--clearly indicate that each of the novelists in question establishes depth in space within the closed geometric spatial system of the Renaissance by means of single viewpoint linear perspective. Those spatial frames are, in varying degrees, endowed with a temporal dimension. Given that spatial framework, each of these novelists studies (1) man, (2) nature, and (3) the transactions between man and the natural world. The most comprehensive representation of the ordinary world of human experience in the novel in the nineteenth century is found in the place novel (Madame Bovary and Le Ventre de Paris)--the consummate expression of the Renaissance conception of space and art in the genre of the novel in the four-hundred-year period that that spatial and aesthetic system was considered a valid basis for the creation of art.

In certain descriptions of landscape in La Chartreuse de Parme and in Madame Bovary, Stendhal and Flaubert, respectively, transcend, whether consciously or unconsciously, the spatial limitations of the closed spatial system of the Renaissance: the former by means of panoramic and telescopic vision, the latter by describing three separate actions simultaneously. La Chartreuse de Parme and Madame Bovary, seen as autonomous aesthetic phenomena, represent a dialectic between the space picture of the Renaissance and that of the modern world.

Unlike Chateaubriand, Balzac, Stendhal, Flaubert, and Zola, all of whom adapt the inherited spatial and artistic legacy of the Renaissance to their individual aesthetic needs, Huysmans rejects the Renaissance conception of space as a valid basis for the creation of art. Huysmans establishes the spatial form of A Rebours and of the landscape descriptions therein by means of multiple viewpoint or simultaneous perspective. Several spatial frames are juxtaposed in a moment of time and refer to each other reflexively. Movement in space is possible without any movement in time. The content of A Rebours and of the descriptions of landscape in that novel demonstrate that the study of the time world of history and the imitation of the appearances of beings and things such as they are perceived by the senses are no longer considered as the purpose of art. During the final decades of the nineteenth century art becomes an essentially cerebral undertaking whose purpose is to explore and determine man's psychic position in the modern world. The spatial and aesthetic principles established by Huysmans in A Rebours represent the basic tenets of the cubist conception of space and art.

Information concerning copyright in books

When to Use Form A. Form A is appropriate for published books which have been manufactured in the United States.

What Is a "Book"? The term "books" covers not only material published in book form, but also pamphlets, leaflets, cards, and single pages containing text. Books include fiction, nonfiction, poetry, collections, directories, catalogs, and information in tabular form.

Unpublished Books. The law does not provide for registration of "book" material in unpublished form. Unpublished books are protected at common law against unauthorized use prior to publication.

Duration of Copyright. Statutory copyright in published books lasts for 28 years from the date of first publication, and may be renewed for a second 28-year term.

How to secure statutory copyright in a book

First: Produce Copies With Copyright Notice. Produce the work in copies by printing or other means of reproduction. To secure copyright, it is essential that the copies bear a copyright notice in the required form and position, as explained below.

Second: Publish the Work With Copyright Notice. The copyright law defines the "date of publication" as "... the earliest date when copies of the first authorized edition were placed on sale, sold, or publicly distributed by the proprietor of the copyright or under his authority, . . ."

Third: Register Your Copyright Claim. Promptly after publication, mail to the Register of Copyrights, Library of Congress, Washington, D.C. 20559, two copies of the work as published with notice, an application on Form A, properly completed and notarized, and a fee of $6.

The Copyright Notice. The copyright notice for books shall appear on the title page or verso thereof, and shall consist of three elements: the word "Copyright," or the abbreviation "Copr.," or the symbol ©, accompanied by the name of the copyright owner and the year date of publication. Example © John Doe 1974. Use of the symbol © may result in securing copyright in countries which are members of the Universal Copyright Convention.

NOTE: It is the act of publication with notice that actually secures copyright protection. If copies are published without the required notice, the right to secure copyright is lost, and cannot be restored.

Books manufactured abroad

In General. Form A is not appropriate for books which have been manufactured outside the United States.

Foreign Language Books. Applications covering foreign-language books by foreign authors, manufactured abroad, should be submitted on Form A-B Foreign.

English-Language Books. Books in English manufactured abroad may be registered for "ad interim" copyright (Form A B Ad Interim); or, if they are protected under the Universal Copyright Convention they are eligible for full-term registration on Form A-B Foreign.

(1) Ad Interim Copyright. Ad interim registration is necessary for protection in the United States unless copyright has been secured under the Universal Copyright Convention. To secure ad interim copyright a claim must be registered within 6 months of first publication abroad. Ad interim copyright lasts for 5 years or until an American edition is published within the 5-year period and registered.

(2) Universal Copyright Convention. An English language work by a foreign author first published abroad is eligible for full-term U.S. copyright if: (a) its author is a citizen or subject of a country which is a member of the Universal Copyright Convention, or the work was first published in such country, and (b) all published copies bear the copyright notice provided under the Universal Copyright Convention.

Dear Robert

First, I should identify myself - I am your mother's Aunt Edna and sister of your grandmother, Ora Loomis Russell. So, I am your Aunt Edna, too, 'once removed' or I guess Great Aunt Edna!

I've learned from your mother that you have earned and received your Doctorate in French - hence, I am very pleased and proud to call you Dr. Robert Powell! Congratulations!

And, as far as I know, you are the first member of our family to have earned and received a doctorate. So, I am basking in reflected glory!!

I hope the future - for you will be very bright and rewarding - rewarding to you and to those who come under your influence and teaching. Love and best wishes,

Aunt Edna

Juanita Hedrick

Hedrick serves IU and sings its praises

Juanita Hedrick is a person most would describe as a dedicated Indiana University staff member.

She has worked for IUB for 26 years in the French and Italian department and for a couple years in the early 1940s in the former Correspondence Bureau.

But her work for the university doesn't end with her paid position as an administrative secretary every day.

For the last 17 years, Hedrick has been involved with the operation of the IU Credit Union. Before that, she was an IU Staff Council member for 10 years.

Her dedication was recognized last October when she was one of three staff members who received staff merit awards by IU for exemplary job performance and involvement with the university.

Anyone familiar with the Credit Union operation probably knows her. She was first on the credit committee, which reviews large loan applications, for eight years and is now up for her fourth three-year term on the board of directors.

She served as president last year and vice president during two previous years for the Credit Union. Although the board and committee meetings she attends take up quite a bit of time, Hedrick said she enjoys the work very much.

"It's been a very rewarding experience for me. I've learned so much about the economy and finances. I find myself reading the Wall Street Journal and banking journals. . . You have to do your homework regarding the money market," she explained.

As a board member, she is one of 11 persons with the responsibility of forming policies to manage the Credit Union. "You have to stay on top of the economy and inflation. The board operates just like a business' board of directors."

As her long tenure in the French and Italian department attests, Hedrick also has liked her work there. When she was interviewing for jobs with IU, she thought the department seemed interesting because of the opportunity to work with persons from other countries.

In a few days, you will receive, via UPS, a large box of books from me. These are some of the books that I used while working on my M.A. and Ph.D. in French Literature at Indiana University, Bloomington, IN. Please accept these books with my compliments.

Following the completion of my doctoral thesis, an abstract of which is attached, I secured a position in an investment banking firm on Wall Street, and have since retired (age 40). Currently I am living in the mountains of northeastern Pennsylvania, where I am working on a book on nineteenth-century American history. It seems unlikely that I ever again will use any of the French and Romance Language books that I acquired as a graduate student. For that reason, I am sending some of them to you. I hope that I am acting in the best interest of the books.

Tell Twp. Jr. - Sr. High
Simpson, Penna.
November 15, 1960

Dear Mr. & Mrs. Powell,

Recently a contest, The Voice of Democracy, was conducted in our local High School under the sponsorship of District 10, Veterans of Foreign Wars. The purpose of this contest is to make all citizens conscious of our freedoms and our responsibility in maintaining and extending these freedoms.

Your son, Robert, was one of the five finalists in this contest.

The school feels that the ideals of Democracy must be nurtured in the home. Robert's participation in this contest shows that you, as parents, have met and fulfilled this responsibility. In addition, friendly competition is a great character-builder for tomorrow's keen challenge. We, at Tell are proud to note that Robert is training for that challenge. We are happy to have him as a member of our student body.

In behalf of the faculty,
I am most privileged to say, "Thank you."

Sincerely,
Mrs. Walter Washeleski

[Mrs. Washeleski was a wonderful teacher. She was always very supportive of SRP
in all his endeavors.]
